Taylor and himself in memory of two brothers, Dr. William C. Taylor and David B. Taylor, who entered the Confederate army in April of 1861 and were killed at Appomattox. The warrants were served yesterday by a deputy sheriff of Roanoke county, and the trials have been set for Thursday morning at 10 o'clock before a magistrate in Norfolk. The parents for violation of the child labor law in this State is from $25 to $100.

JURY IS CHOSEN IN RAINES CASE

Slayer of Miss Chambers Enters Plea of Not Guilty.

COUNSEL OUTLINES DEFENSE

Will Attempt to Prove Prisoner Insane at Time of Tragedy.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)

Salem, Va., April 5.—In the Circuit Court of Roanoke county today, Joshua Raines, the slayer of Miss Chambers, the county school teacher, was arraigned and pleaded not guilty to the indictment. The biggest part of the day was spent in securing a jury. Those who will sit on the case are Marshall Layman, W. S. Ronts, W. A. Carney, J. W. Stephens, A. R. Leslie, J. M. True, C. L. Anderson, A. S. Cook, C. M. Boon, P. T. Hartberger, J. S. Loyd, A. L. Moses.

Judges R. C. Jackson and W. J. Denison, counsel for the accused, said in their opening statement that they would attempt to prove to the jury that Joshua Raines was insane at the time he killed Miss Chambers. The prosecution is being conducted by Commonwealth's Attorney James.

Raines' case was studied and a mass of testimony was given by the commission of alienists which ten days ago pronounced him a sane man. When the court adjourned this evening all of the evidence for the Commonwealth was in with the exception of the testimony of one witness, Miss Turner, the teacher who was the assistant to Miss Chambers. She was an eyewitness to the tragedy.

Mrs. J. M. Vogenthaler, David Scales, colored; Voney Scales and a county coroner were among the principal witnesses.

The defense has summoned a large number of witnesses who will testify as to Raines' mental condition at the time of the killing. It is hardly probable that a verdict will be reached before late Monday.

REFUSED TO DIVULGE SECRET

Mrs. Pruitt Attributes Her Suffering In Later Life to the Fact That She Kept Her Condition Secret When a Young Girl

Hickory Grove, S. C.—"I was in bad health before I married," writes Mary Pruitt, of this place, "but kept it a secret, as most young girls do. I am sure if I had taken Cardui, the woman's tonic, when I was young I would not have gone through seven years of suffering.

Soon after I was married the trouble became so severe I was forced to seek relief. I tried every doctor I saw, and five different doctors in one town. They claimed they could cure me, but all failed, and we decided that I would never be well. I had such aching and drawing pains in my back, the sides and head, that I would cry and scream and tell my husband that I was going to die.

Finally, one day he read in the Ladies' Birth Day Almanac about Cardui, the woman's tonic, and got a bottle for me. After taking the first dose I felt better, and after using one bottle I never did have any more pain.

It relieved me at once.

I can never praise Cardui enough."

Cardui has been found to relieve women's pains and strengthen women's weakness.

It has stood the test of time. Try it.

GABRIEL HANOTAUX

WILL VISIT AMERICA

For Many Years One of Most Powerful Figures in European Politics.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENOY.

States Auguste Rodin's bronze, representing France, which is to be placed at the foot of the monument of Samuel de Champlain, the French explorer, next June, the most distinguished, far and away, will be Gabriel Hanotaux, a figure in European politics, owing to his mastery of the pen and his influence in the direction of the Department of Foreign Affairs on the Quai d'Orsay, at Paris.

He is celebrated from one end of Europe to the other, not alone as a great statesman—when in office his countrymen endowed him with the significant nicknames of "Richelieu"—but he is also celebrated as the greatest of living historians.

He is not a very impressive looking man. In fact, appearances are against him; and when he was first appointed as secretary of embassy at Constantinople he incurred the ill will of his ambassador, the late Marquis de Montebello, and especially of the Marquis de Montebello, through his complete lack of distinction of manner and appearance, and by his stooping gait; the latter possibly due to the fact that his parents, and all four of his grandparents, were hard-working tillers of the soil. Private life was not a thing to him; he was the ambassador and to the marquis warning them against Hanotaux, as a man of whom to beware, as high in the favor of the leading republicans at Paris, and as liable to quickly forget anything that might not be strictly republican at the embassy.

The Marquis de Montebello, being a shopkeeper's daughter, was of course especially offended at the idea of having a man of such bourgeois birth, name and appearance, as a member of her husband's staff.

Before Hanotaux has been there for six weeks, he had managed to ingratiate himself with the ambassador to such an extent that she consulted him about everything, and to win the confidence of his chief to such a degree that the latter, when he went away on his annual leave, entrusted the whole conduct of affairs to him. In lieu of the chief secretary, Gambetta had a great idea of Hanotaux, and declared of him, "En voilà un homme!" The only thing against him is his irritability and somewhat sour manner, queer for a man of such high position, and which are probably attributable to the malady of the liver with which he has been afflicted for many years.

In 1856 he threw up his secretaryship at Constantinople, in order to stand for the Chamber of Deputies, and was elected, with 4,000 votes over the rival Republican candidate for his native department, that of the Ain. Three years later, that is to say, in 1859, he became Minister of Foreign Affairs. In the second of the Dupuis administrations, and remained in office, through the changes of cabinet, until 1873, that is to say, for a period of some ten or twelve years. It was to him more than to any one else that was due the successful negotiation of the Franco-Russian alliance, which has been the keystone of France's foreign policy for so many years. In fact, he was regarded, until the Fashoda episode, for which his colleague, M. Delcasse, then Minister of the Colonies, was primarily responsible as the only possible Minister of Foreign Affairs.

France's nineteenth century policy, it was to this Fashoda incident that his retirement from office was due, the blow coming doubly hard, since the dispatch of Major Marchand's expedition across Africa to Fashoda, and the subsequent defiance of Hanotaux's protests by the collector, the Minister of the Colonies, M. Delcasse, who was appointed to succeed him at the Foreign Office.

Generally, when a French cabinet minister falls, especially after so long a term of office as that of Hanotaux, he is regarded as dead, from a political point of view. But nothing of the kind was the case with Hanotaux, and he was at once overwhelmed with the most lucrative offers, by the leading publishers of France, to undertake historical works for them; works for which he was most advantageously situated, not only by taste and experience, but also by the fact that as a former Minister of Foreign Affairs, he had access to all sorts of official documents, at home and abroad, which were not at the disposal of the ordinary student.

Retaining his old nickname of "Richelieu" he continues to enjoy the loftiest esteem of his countrymen, and in foreign capitals, as the most studious of historians, and as the most vigorous and resourceful of statesmen, was invited to preside all sorts of national committees and official commissions and was continuously mentioned by the general public as the most suitable candidate for the presidency of the republic, when he suddenly did something, which, while it furnished a striking evidence of his goodness of heart, was considered to have destroyed his chances of ever obtaining the presidency. For he suddenly, without any warning, announced his marriage. In a quiet village near Nantes, to Mlle. Victorine Meyadelle, the mother of his two children, then in their teens. The marriage was with the object of legitimizing his offspring, and although his friends deplored the marriage, as the ruin of his presidential possibilities, yet they could not but applaud the generous motives by which he was prompted, in offering this tardy reparation to his children and to their mother.

The prestige of the republic suffered so much during the presidency of Jules Grévy from the fact that he had married Mrs. Grévy, who had been his cook, only when their daughter (now the wife of Daniel Wilson) had attained her womanhood, that the marriage was not a happy one, and that no one should ever again be permitted to occupy the presidential chair, as the antecedents of whose wife were not entirely above criticism and reproach.

It was for this reason that Leonie, the devoted woman who was the first wife of Grévy, persisted to the last in refusing to marry him, and the ground that it would wreck the prospects of becoming President of the republic. He repeatedly urged her to wed him, especially during the latter part of his life, but she always refused, and it was in a quarrel following one of these demands on his part, that, exclaiming that she was an obstacle to his political success, she snatched up a pistol, and attempted to kill herself. Gambetta, in endeavoring to wrest the weapon from her, receiving the wound which brought about his premature death a couple of days later.

It is said that, like this Egeria of Gambetta, Mlle. Victorine Meyadelle refused for many years to wed Gabriel Hanotaux, lest she should injure the marriage by thereby; that if the marriage was to marry him, the fault was hers rather than his, and that she finally yielded to his entreaties, and to those of her children, with the utmost reluctance.

There are a large number of other similar instances of devotion and unselfish abnegation on the part of women in the private lives of French statesmen, a condition of affairs arising largely from the fact that so many of the leading men of the Third Republic in France suddenly sprang into prominence and achieved fame almost in the privacy of their homes, and that the women who had been their helpmates in the days of their obscurity and poverty. The action of the women in declining to legitimize their position by means of marriage, lest they should injure the prospects of their husbands, and that their hearts, may not have been quite so moral. But it was admirable in the way of devotion; just as meritorious as the conduct of the men in declining to admit adrift from companions of their days of poverty.

Mme. Gabriel Hanotaux only survived her marriage two years, and died in the privacy of her husband's children, happy in the consciousness of having been his lawful wife, and of nevertheless leaving him with his prospects of succession to the presidency of the republic unimpaired, since her death had not the effect of removing the only obstacle that could have possibly existed, to his elevation to the chief magistracy of the republic. After his mourning, Hanotaux entered public life once more, with the additional thing by his wife and children, and that which appeared at the time to be the sacrifice of his entire future political career. There is no one who will not think more highly of him to-day than formerly.

Hill was one of the three negroes who broke out of the Dinwiddie jail several nights ago, and he was the only one recaptured. The other two, Gus Neal and John Billups, are still at large, and are under sentence of two years in the penitentiary for breaking and robbery—are still at large.
